UPDATE ON IntersectionALLY: Serving Clients & Colleagues Better by Anticipating Diversity

"You can't say that anymore."

Black or African-American.

"My pronouns are they/them." Autistic or person with Autism.

"I'm a cripple." Illegal alien or undocumented American. "I'm fat."

Have you ever found yourself at a loss when trying to discuss an integral part of your client's identity?

Have you ever sensed a colleague's discomfort without being able to pinpoint the source?

We mean well, but our knowledge is limited largely by our own lived experiences. To counteract this, we must engage in an intersectional approach in both our interpersonal communications and personal education.

This CLE will help define the terms surrounding diversity to enable better discussions and help you identify implicit biases. Most importantly, you will walk away with strategies for interrupting bias and practical tips for working with specific marginalized groups.
